Problem

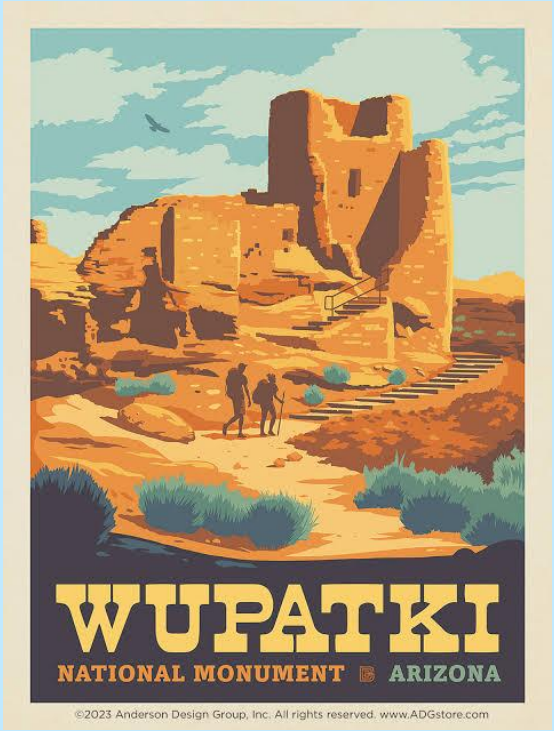

Cliffside National park has been open since 1845 as a testimate to nature and a landmark for visitors, campers, and archeologist alike. However, recent years has shown a slow turnout of new visitors. The park has commissioned me to create an Ad Campaign to showcase the best parts of themselves to attract more customers while trying to develop their own identity.

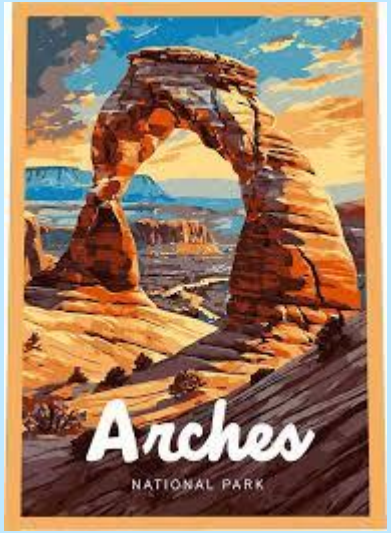

Solution

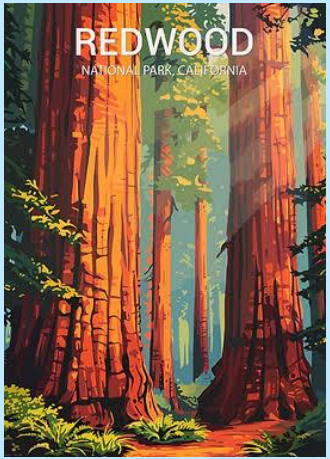

The solution I found was to take inspiration from other park posters that reveal more landscape and has usage of birds eye view perspective. The colors used are monochromatic meaning that i used both bright and dark colors on the landscape. To achieve this I used the gradient tool as I created the shapes for the rocks and sky. The ground just has a color with a darker background color.

Research

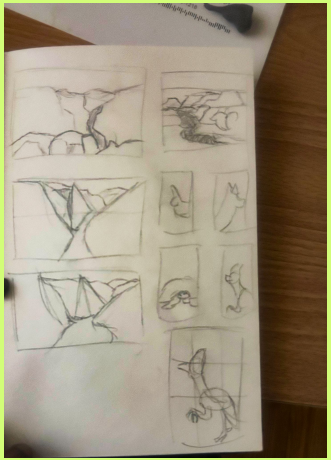

The research I've discovered about Park ad posters is that they always have monochromatic colors with various styles of perspectives. Showcasing the landscape along with animals to give the viewer a better preview, rather than a smaller window.

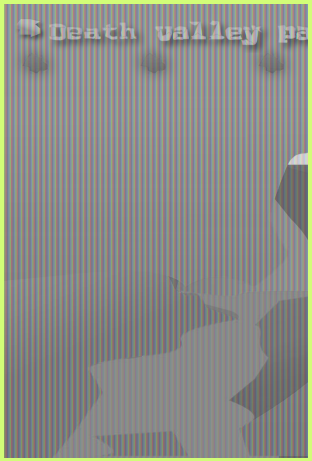

Analysis

I used a variety of Arizona parks as inspiration. The gradient tool was used to not only color but show off the reflectional light. Most environment based off of this has the colors that resemble orange to brown. I wanted to try and replicate the retro park ad look by making shapes filled with the gradient color.

Ideation

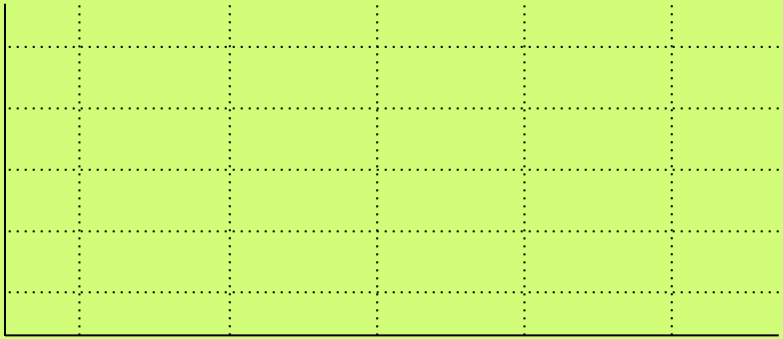

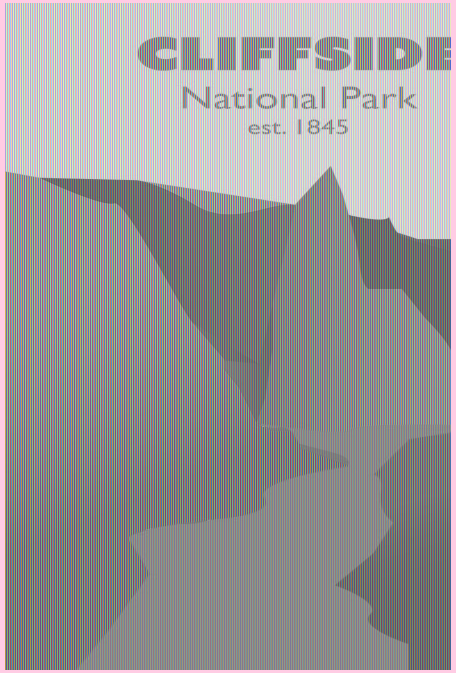

The ideas came from originally wanting to advertise the park while showing animals as well. The way i wanted to do this was to have a silhouette of an animal that lived in the region for this I chose a jack rabbit as they usually are associated with swiftness and their endurance. As I was making it however I've discovered that the silhouette is blocking 75% of the scenery which is counterintuitive to the pointof the assignment.

Iteration

After giving up on the Silhouette idea i have decided to go with the whole scenery plan. Where I show the whole scenery of the park in different perspectives. My idea for this was to showcase different areas of the park giving people a deeper perspective in the land they want to visit.

Deliverables

The intention was to attract people to an environment similar to the grand canyon. I thought the best way was to showcase this was to show the environment with gradient colors to give the illusion of light reflection.

Deliverables

This design was more basic. I knew the gradient colors give off different lighting affects, so layering different shapes with gradient colors would give off an atmosphere.

Deliverables

For this horizontal design, My goal for this design was to show the massive canyons of the park. This design specifically was for horizontal designs. The typography as well was meant to go along with this.

Deliverables

For the button designs, I wanted the design to still keep its perspective while being smaller.
